

Religious Studies

Overview

This course requires you to have an enquiring mind, an interest and a desire to examine some of the biggest questions in the universe! You do not need a religious belief (though it is fine if you do have one). You will need to be able to read quite challenging texts and write extended essays, take notes, and most importantly be confident to discuss and examine a range of different issues, such as whether there is a God, how we make moral decisions and how Christianity has developed.

Religious Studies is widely accepted as an entry qualification for further and Higher Education courses. Therefore, it is particularly helpful for study in any of the Arts and Sciences, with focus on Humanities, Philosophy, Law, Medicine, Healthcare, Social Work, Psychology, Policing and many more.

Studying this course will develop a wide range of skills, including those essential for enquiry, interpretation, critical thinking, evaluation and communication. It is ideal for developing the academic skills needed for degree study or work that includes an ethical aspect, such as the Law or the Armed Forces.
